INTERVIEW

Physiology

Hi, what's your name?

Parvus, I believe. Though no one really calls me that...because, well, I ain't got no one to talk to.

How tall would you say you are?

Good question, 'cause I have no idea. I feel tall when I am alone, but everywhere else, things are significantly taller than I am, so I really don't know.

What's your eye colour?

I don't really have... let's just say they're white.

Your skin colour?

Well see that's due to the weather, but yeah I'd say pale. Probably not the healthiest shade, but what can you do, eh?

Physiology

What's your posture like?

I've been pretty down for about as long as I can remember, which hasn't helped my posture at all. So, I'm usually pretty hunched over because of that. Also my neck gets damn cold...

How would you describe your appearance?

Like I said, I feel tall. I'm quite skinny, but my raincoat tends to hide that. You will never catch me with my hands out of my pockets, because I have no intention of letting them freeze off. I wear large raincoat to keep out the elements. My legs are fairly skinny. Oh and I've got a pretty large bald head, you really can't miss it.

Any defects?

Uhh, personal question much? Well, see I don't have a mouth to speak of - that was not a pun, don't even think about it - so it kinda makes this interview a bit difficult. Anyways, I don't eat, thankfully, and I guess my posture is a bit of a defect...or maybe I am the defect...whatever.

Sociology

Which social class do you identify with?

None. Well I am the only person that I know, so yeah, society is pretty classless. I guess you could say that I am subservient to those machines and the lighthouse, but more on that later.

What's your occupation?

Ah, well in the simplest terms, I am a lighthouse keeper. Literally, it is a enormous structure, reaching into the clouds, that sends out a great beam of light across the land, as night falls. Figuratively, it is a beacon of light, that guides the working machinery back to a safe haven when the day ends. I gotta keep the whole shebang up and running, so everyone gets home safely. Sounds lovely, don't it?

Any education?

That's complicated. I mean I gotta believe that I'm educated, but I can't remember how or by whom. I basically know how to do one thing well, even damn well, and that is to maintain this here lighthouse.

Home life?

I live alone. Home is where I go when I'm not working. Movin' on, next question.

Sociology

Are you religious?

What, in keeping the lighthouse going? No, I believe, or I guess, wanna believe, that there has to be something better than all this. I like to think that I won't be doing this for the rest of my life, but who knows anything really?

Your place in the community?

Look, I'm really not part of any community, but in terms of my job, I'm pretty low on the social food-chain, even though I play such an instrumental role in it...for it...it's pretty messed up okay?

Any hobbies?

Not really, more like one little ritual. I like to look across the sea at the patch land on the other side - I really dream of going there someday. But yeah, I always stand on the edge of the cliff and gaze idly, before heading home for the day.

Psychology

Describe your moral standards.

I would say they are pretty high. I mean I am highly devoted to my job - been at it for decades - although I really don't like the constant routine. I wouldn't even dream of leaving the lighthouse to its own devices; I've been entrusted with something larger than myself. Besides it'd go to pieces in a day.

What are your personal ambitions?

To experience something different and larger than myself or rather to find a concrete reason to exist...unless the concrete is the reason I exist. I mean the lighthouse. It's made of concrete or something.

It sounds as though you have some frustrations and disappointments?

The grinding routine of the day-to-day, really gets me down. I wish I wasn't so damn devoted to what I do. You know, if it didn't keep me so busy, I might have explored more of the surrounding area. But then the snow also doesn't help much with that...

Psychology

Your temperament?

I'm pretty calm in general. I don't really react much to what happens around me, although nothing ever happens. You could say I'm indifferent, I guess. What happens, happens. It doesn't care about me, and I don't care about it.

Explain your attitude towards life.

Like I said, I'm just watching the clock. But, I'm not hopeful, I really don't see anything changing anytime soon.

Any complexes?

Uhm, I guess you could say something like a lot of unhappiness. Oh, and loneliness...yeah there's quite a bit of that too.

Thanks for allowing this interview.

Okay. Sure. So long...
